Not illustrated. 1809 Excerpt: . . . definitively adjusted your alliance with my mother, I shall lose no further time in sounding Mr. Devereux on the disposal of his daughter, and we may very probably effect a double marriage at the same happy moment, provided only that I find the young ladys fortune answer my expectations. That is truly a very prudent consideration, Philip replied, and puts me in mind, Sir David, to ask you what is the fortune I am to expect with the lady you mother. The happiest that can befall you, was the answer, and a bond of twenty thousand pounds cancelled on your weddingday. With these words Ap Owen left the room, , whilst poor Philip, silenced but not satisfied, made no further effort to detain him. . Though Mrs. Rachel De Lancaster had some grounds for expecting a proposal, she had no such plea upon the score...
