Not illustrated. 1915 Excerpt: .This, if you wish so, is a parallel to the famous visits of Lasalle to Bismarck, when both, according to the old chancellor's own testimony, acted like good neighbors and entirely agreed in many points. Nobody would have been surprised if the Kaiser himself would have expressed his sympathy to Frank's parents, who are poor old Jews living in the Black Forest. For His Majesty proved that he is free from all prejudice when he said those famous words: I know of no more parties; I only know Germans. The Kaiser acted no differently than any simple workman or burgher; he himself went to war and sent his own six sons to the front and his only son-in-law. Of these six sons the youngest, Prince Joachim, has been severely wounded, which amply proves that at the moment when the Fatherland calls there is no...
