Not illustrated. 1878 Excerpt: .evil are But in our estimation;--humph! the thought Loses itself in puzzling sophistry. Re-enter Pellitus and captain. Captain, bring hither, under guard, the pilgrim. Exit captain. Ah! Pellitus, throw off th enchanter s mask; Tell me in honest truth how learned you this; I doubt your demons. Pellitus. Doubt! when the wind howls, What stirs the elements to storm and rage? What pushes over an invisible arch The burning sun? why doth the pale moon shine With altering phase? Do you doubt these, O king, Because you cannot see th invisible hands That make each change? then wherefore will you doubt Of my obedient demons? There are powers, We cannot see, so subtle in their essence That human sight grasps not their images; But what they do, as sunshine, lightning, storm, Is so apparent unto conscious matter That even the torpid earth feels their strong hands Upon her, and cries, midst tumults, or midst silence, Lo! the gods move me, and send down their demons To mark my bosom with a myriad fingers That push up grass-blades, clothe the great-armed oaks, Loosen white frost-caps on high mountain-tops, Heave ocean into billows, sweep broad plains With the great besom of the hurricane, Or launch destruction with the thunderbolts. O king, of a like subtlety, my demons Mock at dull sight; I show you their effects; If these be true, why not believe the rest? King. I cannot answer you. Enter captain and Brian surrounded by a guard....
